Freda,

I only have access to the data for Gardasil from the US VAERS. I don't have access to the Cervarix adverse event reports that would be updated monthly.

The issue for both vaccines is that it is just as effective if given to young women who are already sexually active, instead of young girls - given the propensity for young girls to still develop their neurological systems, it seems wise to wait until the girls are a bit older. There is no particular reason to go for 11 year olds.

You might also contact Diana Zuckerman, PhD who is interested in this topic in the US>

Best wishes
