

RESIGNATION FROM THE BRITISH PSYCHOLOGICAL SOCIETY

I, Lisa Blakemore-Brown, Psychologist and specialist in Autism and related “tapestry” disorders, am formally and publicly resigning from the British Psychological Society on this day the 11th March 2008 as I have lost all faith and confidence in it as a Regulatory Body which is capable of protecting the public or performing its duties to support professional psychologists who are doing their duty to undertake an independent service for the public in the field of Autism and related disorders.

I will continue to work as a Psychologist, and when a proven responsible body is in place to regulate Psychologists I will be happy to join them.

Psychologists should be regulated but by a Society which is itself regulated and is accountable when proven wrong.
